JEFFERSON HIGH HAS 410 STUDENTS

The opening of the spring term of the Jefferson Union high school on last Monday was marked by the largest enrollment in the history of the school. Forty-five new students entered, forty of whom came from Woodrow Wilson, Crocker and Jefferson grammar schools, bringing the total enrollment for the year up to 410. This is almost one hundred more than the total state enrollment of the school for last year, which shows that the student body of Jefeson Union high school is growing at an amazingly fast rate. The increase figures out exactly 25 percent.

On the first day of the term the students met in regular classes and were assigned lessons for the following day. This was made possible by organizing the work for the new term so that the pupils were able to make out their program cards on the last day of school before Christmas vacation. On that day the classes were organized and the work planned for every student in the school.

When the new students entered on last Monday they found their program all arranged and were able to get down to work without any lost time.

Principal James Ferguson remarked that efficiency in school work requires the elimination of lost time and lost motion just the same as efficiency in any line of business which is run successfully. He believes that habits of promptness and industry and thoroughness must be displayed by those who manage the schools before there is any prospect of having developed in the pupils such habits.

The entering freshman program consists of Commercial Arithmetic, English, Physical Education, Chorus, Civics and Physical Geography.

On the first morning all of the entering students were initiated into the new atmosphere of high school by Principal Ferguson. He explained to them that the increased freedom of the high school meant that they had become older and were about to hove added resposibilities—that they were not to consider themselves as little children needing the watching eye of a guardian every minute to keep them out of harm or out of mischief. He told them that the aim of high school was to give them training so that they would be able to do their part in the world's work and thus be successful men and women. In order to be happy in school, he said, they must be puctual in attendance and learn each lesson thoroughly every day so that they would be able to pass any test the teacher might give them.

There were two new teachers on the faculty for the opening of school—Mr. A. H. Quirmbach and Mr. Clive M. Saiz.

Mr. Quirmbach comes highly recommended by the University of Southern California, and will have classes in Shop Science, Shop Mathematics, Physical Geography and Arithmetic. His Science and Mathematics courses are supplementary to the Smith Hughes work of the high school for which special aid is received from the state and federal governments.

Mr. Saiz will have charge of classes in Economics, U. S. History, Civics and Dramatics. He is recommended highly by educators of such standing as Professor Lee Emerson Bassett and Professor Harden Craig of Stanford University.

WHY DO PEOPLE GO TO CHURCH?

"There isn't a place in this whole world which is desirable for homemakers which is ten miles away from a church." That's rather a bold statement, but it's true. You can find lots of room in Africa and China where there are no Christian churches, but who wants to live there. When people want the comforts of life, such as schools and hospitals, libraries and radios, electric washing machines and hot and cold water, they always move near a Christian church. Seems rather peculiar, doesn't it?

Grace Presbyterian church invites you to participate in her services. Sunday school for everybody at 10 A. M. Church service at 7:45 P. M. Corner of Hanover and Evergreen.

CITY OFFICIALS WITNESS INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mayor H. H. Smith and Councilman A. J. Dalton were among the Daly City representatives at the inauguration ceremonies at Sacramento last Tuesday, when James J. Rolph, Jr., became governor of the state of California. Mayor Smith and Councilman Dalton report that they were royally received by the governor, and that they thoroughly enjoyed the most colorful ceremonies, the splendid military parade and other features of the inaugural.

MERCHANTS HAVE GREAT MEETING

There was a splendid meeting of the Daly City Merchants' Association last Wednesday night at the City Hall auditorium, with President Andrew Vireno in the chair.

Mr. Henry Edwards, representing the San Francisco Labor Council, appeared before the organization and asked that a committee be sent to a meeting of the San Francisco Labor Council, Thursday night, to co-operate with them in urging the work of widening of Mission street and San Jose avenue at Daly City, so as to give speedy employment to those out of work. John J. Fahey and Andrew Vireno were appointed on a committee for that purpose, and it was suggested that Councilman Bodien be asked to go with the committee as a representative of the city of Daly City. The regular committee on unemployment was requested to keep in touch with the street committee of the San Francisco board of supervisors in an effort to get them to speed up the work.

A communication was read from Congressman Arthur Free, saying that at our suggestion he had made application to the postal authorities for a post office at Daly City, and would let us know the result. A letter from Postmaster Todd of San Francisco, bearing on the same matter, was also read.

A letter from Samuel Kahn, president of the Market Street Railway Company, stated that the company was investigating the proposition of establishing a bus line for the accommodation of the people living at a distance from Mission street in the vicinity of Daly City, and would report the result to the Merchants' Association.

Complaint was made about the poor lighting on San Jose avenue from Mission street to the county line.

It was suggested that the Merchants' Association will make an effort in the near future to obtain a five cent fare from San Francisco to the limits of Daly City at Colma.

The dues collected were $31.

A banquet will be served in the near future.

The next meeting will be held on the first Wednesday evening in February. All merchants, business and professional men are welcome at these meetings.

W. H. CLAY, Recording Secretary.

VETERAN FIREMEN SELECT OFFICERS

Mr. Andrew Vireno, before retiring as president of the Veteran Firemen's Association and turning over the position to the incoming president, in a few well chosen words thanked all the officers and members of the association for their hearty co-operation during his term as president.

The following are the officers selected for the year 1931: President, W. J. C. Goldkuhl; First Vice-President, Andrew P. Chesney; Second Vice-President, James Callan; Secretary, Edward J. Ford; Treasurer, Al. J. Green; Marshal, H. W. A. Rickman; Chaplain, H. H. Smith; Directors, Lawrence Shaw, Edward Goldkuhl, Joseph Soares, A. W. Fonseca, Geo. W. Felsch.

The meeting was well attended, and the members present were pleased to see so many at this meeting. Those present discussed past experiences, and difficulties they had encountered in fighting fires and saving life and property in the past.

BUILDING PERMITS

Castle Building Co., 15-45 Cavour street, five rooms; 61-116 Moltke street, five rooms; 62-114 Moltke street, five rooms; 17-49 Cavour street, five rooms.

H. Shapiro, 218 Los Banos avenue, five rooms.

Victor Holmgren, 243 Acton street, five rooms.

Royal Neighbors Meet

An interesting and delightful gathering of the Vista Grande Camp, Royal Neighbors, was held December 23, at the home of Mrs. A. Romer, of Brunswick street, this being their regular social meeting night. The Christmas spirit was predominating and there was an exchange of gifts by all in attendance. Refreshments were served to fourteen guests by the hostess.

Ladies' Home Club Has Session

The Ladies' Home Club met in the club house on Werner street last last Tuesday, with a representative number of members present. The next meeting will be held on Tuesday, January 20, when plans will be made for Founders' Day breakfast, which will be held in February.

STUDENT KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Another fatal accident occurred on the Skyline boulevard last Saturday. Frank Ragan, youthful Stanford University varsity tennis coach, was instanly killed, and Miss Frances Creel, daughter of George Creel, well known journalist, and his wife, Blanche Bates, were injured when the automobile in which they were riding turned over. The accident occurred on the Skyline boulevard about six miles south of Colma.

An eye witness to the accident reported to State Traffic Officer Otto Schramm, of Daly City, that Regan attempted to pass another automobile when his car skidded and turned over hree times.

Ragan was flung fifty feet from the machine and his neck broken. Miss Creel was badly shaken up but not seriously injured. She was taken to the Fleishacker Emergency hospital by John Harrington, of San Francisco, who witnesses the accident.

Ragan's body was removed to the Lasswell undertaking parlors in Daly City, in charge of Deputy Coroner Luella D. Pepper.

Ragan was formerly assistant to Howard Kinsey as tennis instructor at the Califorina Tennis Club in San Francisco. He was made Stanford tennis coach last October. He was 28 years old and lived at 85 Central avenue, San Francisco.

Miss Creel is a student at Mills College and lives with her parents in San Francisco. She is 17 years old.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

Lois Alexander, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Myron Alexander, of Hanover street, celebrated her fourth birthday last Tuesday with a birthday party given in her honor. The table was very prettily decorated with animals of all colors, a fancy animal crepe paper tablecloth, and a fancy frosted cake with animal crackers placed all over the cake. Lois received many lovely gifts. The guests included Barbara and Rose Carlson, Elsie Belli, Thelma Newnham, Vincetta Vince, Frank Lambertson, Lois, Myron and Doris Mae Alexander, Mrs. A. Curran, Mrs. F. Lambertson, Miss Grace Nelson, Mrs. S. Ellison, Mrs. M. Millhauser, Mrs. E. Vince, and Mrs. Ivy Alexander.

A DESERVED TRIBUTE

The splendid tribute paid Mrs. Elizabeth M. Kneese by John W. Coleberd on behalf of the county bar association when she retired as county clerk yesterday was sincere and well deserved. Mrs. Kneese leaves the office of county clerk with a record of which she and the county may well be proud. In ten years of public service she achieved a reputation for efficiency and courtesy that will forever be a monument to her, and the tribute of the bar association yesterday only expresses the thought of all with whom her public duties brought her into contact. Of the retiring clerk it may well be said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

MASKED BANDITS GET $15

Two masked bandits who held up Joseph Cousineau, in San Mateo, and escaped with $15, are being sought by police. The two men, with bandana handkerchiefs concealing the lower part of their faces, came into Cousineau's store shortly after 9 o'clock, and while one of them covered Cousineau with a revolver the other took the money from the cash register, after which they escaped in an automobile.

STUDYING COUNTY BUILDING PROBLEM

The San Mateo county grand jurors have begun a thorough investigation into the necessity of enlarging the present county court house, building a new one, or finding outside space, a problem which must be solved in the very near future in order to take care of the county's growing official business, the jurors have been advised.

County officials were summoned to appear before the jury, meeting in the supervisors' chamber at Redwood City last Tuesday, and from those who appeared the inquiry revealed that space in the court house is at a high premium. All but one of the officials heard stressed the urgent need of more room in which to handle county affairs.

The pressure of court business and the likelihood of adding another judge to the county judicial staff was a matter considered also by the grand jury. Should another judge be allotted to this county, this will necessitate another court room, additional chambers, and jury room. This would take the present supervisors' chamber and the office of Purchasing Agent Werder.

The plan most favored by some of the grand jurors is the securing of an outside office building and concentrating the county activities there, with the exception of those interlocked with the courts and the so-called key offices, which would retain space in the court house. It was learned that some of the jurors considered it impractical to make an addition to the present structure.

Members of the grand jury said that full recommendations would be made at the completion of the investigation, and then it would be up to the supervisors to carry out the recommendations or some plan of their own for relieving the present congestion.

CROWDS WITNESS ROLPH INAUGURAL

Before a large crowd of spectators, assembled before a platform at the state capitol at Sacramento, last Tuesday, James J. Rolph, Jr., was inaugurated as California's twenty-seventh governor, in one of the most colorful ceremonies in the history of the state.

The inauguration took place shortly after 10 A. M., after both houses of the state legislature were called to order in joint session by Senator Arthur H. Breed, of Oakland, president pro tempore of the state senate, and Speaker Edgar C. Levey of the state assembly.

An orchestra then played "Smiles," and the invocation was pronounced by the Right Rev. Robert Armstrong. Senator Breed then introduced Governor C. C. Young, who delivered his final address to the legislature.

After the oath of office had been been administered, Governor Rolph was presented with the governor's flag by the California National Guard. A governor's salute of seventeen guns was fired by army cannon stationed about Capitol park.

The same procedure was followed for the inauguration of Frank F. Merriam as lieutenant governor. The ceremonies closed with playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and a benediction by the Right Rev. William Hall Moreland, of Sacramento.

Rolph began the reading of his inaugural address after the governor's salute was fired. In it he outlined the new administration policies, indicating that his regime will be along the line of economy, but "not of parsimony."

During the afternoon a military parade was the feature of the inaugural celebration, and at night a grand inaugural ball was held at the municipal auditorium.

GAS COMPANY TO ENLARGE THE PLANT AT SAN MATEO

Bids for construction of a $45,000 service plant in San Mateo are being awaited by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. A building permit for the new structure, which is to be located at Tenth avenue and South Claremont street, was issued last Saturday by Building Inspector M. J. Powers, of San Mateo.

According to plans the plant will consist of three buildings, two of which will have a combined frontage of 300 feet on South Claremont street. One building will house offices, a warehouse and storage shop, and the second will contain a garage, auto machine shop, carpenter shop and electrical department. The third structure will house a gas meter shop. Provision for pole and wire storage is in the rear.

FRANCIS CHOSEN BOARD CHAIRMAN

Supervisor Manuel Franciso, of Half Moon Bay, became chairman of the San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday. John W. Poole, of Redwood City, a former chairman of the board, received two votes and Francis three.

Supervisor Francis was nominated by Supervisor Poole. Supervisor C. V. Thompson, of Pescadero, who had just completed a two year term as chairman, then nominated Supervisor Poole, who declined, stating that he had been chairman on a previous occasion. The declination was not accepted, and the vote was taken, resulting in the election of Supervisor Francis.

The new chairman has been a member of the board of supervisors since November, 1920. He succeeded his brother, Joseph Francis. He operates a grocery store in Half Moon Bay.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Kneese, the retiring county clerk, was presented with a diamond brooche by J. W. Coleberd, of South San Francisco, on behalf of the Bar Association of San Mateo county. Mr. Coleberd and Attorney James T. O'Keefe paid high tribute to Mrs. Kneese, as did Supervisors Hickey and Thompson. Supervisor Thompson also thanked the newspapers of the county for their co-operation.

The final business to be transacted before adjournment at noon was the approval of a claim against the county for work in the First road district.

An election for the dissolution of the Emerald Lake fire district was set for February 11. Due to withdrawal of certain estates from the district, members felt that the tax would be too high.

The annual report of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce was read and ordered filed. Supervisor Thompson remarked that it was comprehensive and showed a lot of good work.

Appreciation for the co-operation of the board of supervisors was contained in letters received from County Treasurer Grace Cooper and Bert Meek, director of public works of the State Highway Commission.

An ordinance was presented by William Logue, Jr., of San Mateo, for adoption. It stated that work on all county projects would be done by residents of the county. It was referred to District Attorney Swart.

Changes in county offices took place quietly at noon last Monday. Friends of County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman, County Treasurer Harry B. Jenkins, and County Surveyor James S. James sent floral offerings to the three men.

County Clerk Hinman's first official act after the meeting of the board of supervisors was to appoint William Augustus, of Burlingame, chief deputy county clerk. All other clerks were retained.

George Kneese, retiring county surveyor, and Mrs. Grace L. Cooper, retiring county treasurer, spent the afternoon making their successors, James S. James and Harry B. Jenkins, acquainted with their offical duties.

STEEL WORKER INJURED WHILE UNLOADING PLATES

Gustave Schmidt, pioneer South San Francisco resident, is in the hospital suffering from a fractured pelvic bone and other injuries, the result of being jammed against two steel plates at the Western Pipe & Steel Company's plant. Schmidt, employed as a helper at the plant, was unloading plates from a crane when another load of plates carried on a traveling crane came along and jammed him against the plates he was unloading. According to physicians at the hospital, he will be confined to his bed four months or more.

QUAKE SHAKES BURLINGAME RESIDENTS FROM THEIR BEDS

The peninsula from South San Francisco to Redwood City was rocked Sunday night by a short tremblor, which seemed to center in Burlingame. It was felt there about 1:45 A. M., and while very short was of such violence that houses of Burlingame fairly rocked. Several persons reported being thrown from their beds by force of the shock. There was no damage to amount to anything reported, however. All the bayside cities in the county reported feeling the shock.

THREE INQUESTS TO BE HELD IN DALY CITY NEXT TUESDAY

Three inquests will be held next Tuesday by Deputy Coroner Luella Pepper, in Daly City. The inquests will be on Frank A. Regan, Stanford tennis coach, killed an an auto accident; Frank J. Sanborn, West Palm Beach, Fla., found dead in a Colma automobile camp, and an unidentified man killed by a street car in Colma.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS SIDETRACKS LABOR ACT

The San Mateo county board of supervisors, in concluding business of the old year, last Monday sidetracked an ordinance designed to give San Mateo county mechanics preference on all jobs which involved the expenditure of county funds. The sidetracking was done after District Attorney Franklin Swart declared the ordinance in its present form was not in keeping with the law.

The proposed ordinance was offered by William Logus, representative of the Piumbers' union. He later withdrew it, and said he would have it prepared in legal form and submit it at a later meeting of the board of supervisors.

SCOTTISH ISLANDS PLEAD FOR TELEPHONE SERVICE

The inhabitants of the islands of Barra, Lewis, and others of the Hebridean group off the west coast of Scotland are getting tired of their isolation, and a strong appeal was recently made in their behalf to the British Postmaster General for the installation of telephones in every village and district. These small communities are not able to afford the guarantee of $40 which is necessary before a public telephone is installed, but in the appeal it is pointed out that if the medical services which have been organized by the Scottish Board of Health are to be effective, a system of telephone communication is a necessity.

Alaska's Lofty Mountain

If on top of Mount Whitney, California, the highest mountain in the United States, were piled Mount Mitchell, the highest eastern peak, the total altitude—21,207 feet above sea level—would be only a little in excess of that of Mount McKinley, Alaska, according to the Geological Survey of the Department of the Interior. The height of Mount McKinley is 20,300 feet.

PLEDGES ECONOMY –NOT PARSIMONY

Governo James Rolph, Jr., last Tuesday delivered his inaugural address to the state legislature, outlining the policies which he will use in guiding the government of California during the next four years.

Discussing every phase of the state government, the new governor displayed a familiarity with the situations existing in all departments of the state.

"The greatest business of the state is the business of government, and it is the least understood," he declared. "Government should be conducted on lines of economy, but not on a basis of parsimony."

Indicating that he intended to carry this theory into practice, Governor Rolph said that conditions in state institutions, particularly prisons, are in need of correction.

Overcrowded prisons are a breeding place for future crimes, where broken, dispirited men merely plot against their fellows, and soured and embittered, they plot against society, he asserted. State prisons should be so enlarged that they will give opportunity for segregation and constant and wholesome employment for the inmates, even at the expense of building added prisons, according to the chief executive.

There will be no occasion to seek additional sources or increased rates of revenue in the coming biennium, as the normal increase in revenue should take care of the normal increase in expenditures, in the opinion of Governor Rolph, and he added: "I am well aware that state and local taxes have become a serious burden on real estate, agriculture, business, and the whole population. To keep taxation as low as possible without impairing the service which modern, humane and civilized government ought to render to the public will be my constant concern."

He recommended establishment in the state board of equalization of a permanent, non-political, fact-finding body, to serve as a permanent tax commission studying taxation and means of lightening the burden of taxes in California.

Difficulties of the water problem in California are mainly financial, the governor said. Economically, the cures proposed so far seem about as bad as the disease, in his opinion. Robbing or wrecking of one section in order to sustain another is not sound. Impoverishment of farmers of any section in order to bring under cultivation lands whose yields will merely augment the existing over-production of farm products, he said.

He expressed determination to do everything in his power to lessen and alleviate the reclamation tax problem, where farmers are carrying heavy burdens of reclamation and irrigation taxes.

Liberal financial support of the entire public school system, from kindergarten to university, will always have his favorable consideration, he asserted.

With expenditures in the department of agriculture steadily increasing, Governor Rolph asked what had been accomplished by this expenditure.

"Our farmers are earning less for their labor and investment than ever before in the history of agriculture," he declared. "Perhaps the department needs all the money it has requested, but surely a large proportion should be spent that more people may eat of the bounty of our rich soil and that our people who cultivate it should have some reward for their labor."

Labor is entitled to its fair share of the benefits brought by machinery, improved methods of distribution, and increased national wealth, the governor told the legislature, and said he intended to assist each prudent, forward step in that direction.

"One of my urgent ambitions as governor will be to accomplish something in the way of stimulating and reviving the languishing mining industry," Governor Rolph continued. "I would like to see the entire Mother Lode and all the mining regions humming with activity."

A hint that part of the gasoline tax money may be used to aid cities now supporting main highway arteries through their streets was seen when the governor said:

"I expect to ask our highway authorities to co-operate in construction of roads inside incorporated cities that are logically direct connections and a part of our state system to the extent possible with funds available under existing law, without jeopardizing carrying on of the state highway program."

Codification of the building and loan association laws, modernizing them to suit present conditions, is to be advocated by the governor, he declared. Although associations will not be unfairly restricted, they will be placed on a thoroughly sound basis worthy of complete public confidence, he insisted.

Concluding his address, Governor Rolph said: "I wish to imbue the people of California with my own faith in California. I wish to begin my administration on a note of hope and confidence. Be prepared by holding such hope and confidence to follow my leadership into the bright days which I see just ahead."

GENERAL PERSHING P. T. A. HOLDS MONTHY MEETING

The General Pershing P. T. A. held its regular monthly meeting Tuesday, January 6, at 622 Hanover street, Mrs. M. Boyle presiding.

A report was made by Mrs. W. Pechinino regarding the Christmas party given the children. It was sure a big success and all the members feel that it was a wonderful ending to the term.

Mrs. W. Bolger gave a report and a summary regarding the gift sent to the Preventorium. Two lovely woolen sweaters found their way into the heart of that adorable little tot. Their Christmas party was a wonderful success also. Each and every child there was made happy.

The next meeting, which is to be held in February, is to be Father's Night. A fine program is being arranged by Mrs. B. MacCarthy and Mrs. P. A. Lyons. A Founders' day program is to be arranged, as February is the month for celebrating the founding of this wonderful organization. After the program, whist is to be played, in which the fathers are to play without paying.

The members of the association discussed the possibility of opening a philanthropy center. Mrs. Bolger was appointed to get information as to how this could be carried out successfully. South San Francisco and Redwood City only recently opened one, and Daly City is surely big enough to enjoy such a project, if it can be carried out successfully.

A whist party is to be held next Wednesday at 622 Hanover street. Mrs. Forrest is chairlady. Come and enjoy a lovely time.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served, Mrs. B. MacCarthy having made cup-cakes in her own kitchen to accommodate all the members.

Mrs. William Boyle, of Vacaville, arrived at the home of her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Boyle, of Winchester street, in time to be a luncheon guest last Thursday afternoon. She will be their house guest for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Foppiano, of Evergreen avenue, are the happy grandparents of a daughter born to Mr. and Mrs. Mal Tacchi, of South San Francisco, in St. Joseph's hospital, San Francisco, January 3. The new arrival has been named Marylin Mae. Mother and baby are getting along very nicely.

Nephi J. Bott, of Logan, Utah, a former resident of Daly City, has been spending the last few days visiting with his many friends in this locality. Mr. Bott is here on a business trip in connection with his Monumental business. Recently his place of business burned down. He intends rebuilding in the near future. Mr. Bott has been away from sunny California in the snow and ice just long enough to appreciate our mild winter weather.

Mrs. J. Cosbie, of Bellevue avenue, entertained a group of ladies at her home last Tuesday night. The ladies came in costume and a most enjoyable evening was spent. Indoor games were very much enjoyed. At midnight a delicious supper was served to the following guests: Hazel Groswrit, Stella Nolan, Wilma Joyce, Ernie McCormack, Cassie Davis, Madeline Hanrahan, Claire Geisner, Lil Della Rosa, Anne Dippel, Edna Cosbie.

Due to quick action on the part of the Daly City police last Sunday, no pedestrian was injured when the trolley lines at the safety zone at Mission street and Knowles avenue broke. A conductor on the No. 18 car was less forutnate, however, as he injured his knee while trying to hold the trolley and bring it over the rope section that the police had rigged up to keep the wires off the ground. The victim of the unfortunate accident was given first aid treatment by W. Harmon, of Company No. 2, Daly City Fire Department, and was later removed to the Emergency hospital.

HERE AND THERE

After advertising for a job, Robert Ralls, of San Francisco, received an offer of $5,000 from a man who wanted his wife killed.

Mrs. James E. Spencer left her husband after three days of married life because she preferred a man with a job.

Love for the old Dane mansion, at Alfred, Maine, has led Mrs. Homer A. Beale to have the three-story house removed to he rhome at Kansas City, Mo., a distance of 1,500 miles.

Claiming that the name "Pickles" had inspired "thoughtless humiliating mirth," Jack and Wilhelmina Pickles, of Springfield, Mass., have obtained court permission to change their last name to Pickford.

URGES EMPLOYMENT OF AMERICAN LABOR

In a memorandum addressed to President Hoover, Representative Bacon, of New York, urged that preferance be given to citizens in employing labor on building construtcion works of the Federal government. In a summarized statement the memorandum decalers in part:

That the direct and tangible benefits of the $315,000,000 building program, as well as the normal building needs, should accrue to the citizens of the country, and that aliens should not be given a preferred status at any time, end especially during unemployment depressions;

That on American institutions, American labor, with preferment to ex-service men, should be given priority over aliens;

That the practice of employing cheap alien labor, willing to work for greatly reduced wages, and unattached to any of the principles which the American workman has stood for in the way of high standards of working and living conditions, has resulted in direct discrimination against American citizen workman, his family, and the community in which he lives, and constitutes a serious threat to stable labor conditions in this country.

That the pitch of resentment against present practice, which permits the employment of aliens on national construction works when there is an ample supply of idle and capable American labor, runs highest when it is realized that in the construction of a veterans' hospital, many veterans have been denied jobs because the construction rolls were filled with the names of aliens.

That the aims of the government construction program should assure against a monopoly of the benefits of labor by aliens, and that a fair and equal and benefiting distribution of these benefits should accure to American citizens in the states where the work is performed, with preferment to the veterans of our wars.

That no contractor should bring with him on a federal construction job, a cheap itinerant, bootleg labor supply when unemployment exists among the qualified citizens of the state where the work is performed.

That the United States should not be less solicitous in its protection and preferment of its citizens than foreign countries, practically all of which have rigid laws against the employment of non-nationals, irrespective of whether the work is for the state or private parties.

That the policy of foreign governments is to avoid unfair competition by cheap alien labor which might result in lowering the standard of conditions attained by national workers, and that the whole aim of their systems is to see that aliens do not receive preferential treatment to the detriment of the national worker.

That the operation of the proposed preference policy could be satisfactorily adjusted from time to time to meet changing economic and unemployment conditions of the country as a whole and for sections of the country where there may be a scarcity of labor.

And that the President has ample authority to direct the promulgation of such a preference policy in the form of a stipulation in the government construction contract form.

CONSISTENT PROGRESS

During 1929 the manufactured gas industry sold 524,115,000 cubic feet of its product to 12,139,000 consumers. Service was provided by 905 gas manufacturing plants, using 107,500 miles of main. Since 1919, gas sales have almost doubled, and the number of purchasers has increased about 50 per cent. This remarkable progress is due to a number of causes, preeminent among them being the fact that gas is the most clean, efficient and economical fuel for both home and industry. No expensive and dirty storage places are required, and gas heat can be made entirely automatic. Gas has taken its place with electricity as an indispensable service.

He smiled ruefully. His modesty would not let him believe that he had in him the qualities to win the woman he wanted to such joy. What had he to offer her so compelling that she would find in the house of their life together doors opening to dear delights and windows looking upon dawns rosy with the promise of new happiness?

The young man carried away with him a good deal to think about. He had found out that he was still sunk fathoms deep in love. It would be this woman or none with him. But what about her? Was there a chance that after many days her heart would answer the deep silent call of his? Had she meant to encourage him? He did not think so. He was almost sure she had not.

Public indignation is usually not sustained. It evaporates with the passage of time. When the rumor spread, about a year after the disappearance of Bob Quantrell, that he had returned to his old haunts the residents of Jefferson county did not bestir themselves to comb the mountains and the chaparral for him. This was strictly the business of Sheriff O'Hara and such indiscreet youths as he could induce to serve with him as deputies.

Bob had been seen one night at Concho. Deever was with him. They made a fleeting visit to Agua Caliente to buy supplies. It was known they had been on Horse creek.

O'Hara recognized that this was to be a campaign. It was essential that he have deputies upon whom he could depend at a pinch. Quietly he set about making preparations.

He dropped in at the Longhorn corral.

"The latest news is that Steve Worrall has been appointed deputy sheriff of Jefferson county," O'Hara said, smiling at him. "He may not know it yet, but he's practically all ready to be sworn in."

"How come? I know quite several jobs I like better than that—safer an' more comfortable an' better pay with less hard work."

"Less hard work. Hmp!" O'Hara's eyes traveled down the long, lean body. "Getting soft. Too much time wasted at playing cards."

"Also," continued Steve, paying no attention to this gratuitous criticism, "I haven't lost Bob Quantrell any to speak of, if that's the notion that's stickin' in yore coconut. He's a slick fellow to leave lay when he's huntin' for nature's sweet solitude. Bob Quantrell ain't interferin' with me any. Why should I get all het up about him? 'Live an' let live' is my motto."

"My idea is to make haste slowly," O'Hara said, passing over the other's objections as negligible. "We'll not go ramping all over the country looking for him. Until we get a straight steer we'll sit tight and wait. No use chasing down every rumor we hear. When I follow a trail I want it to be a hot one."

"Are you aimin' to capture Quantrell's gang? Or to rur 'em down an' wipe 'em out?"

"To capture them if I can. We want men with us who will do to take along. What do you think of Buckskin Joe?"

"Don't know him very well, but he's got a good rep. Fought Apaches. I've heard army officers speak well of him."

"I've thought of Amen Owen, too."

"Good man. He used to be right friendly with Bob, though."

"So did you and I, for that matter. If Owen throws in with us he'll go through."

"I reckon."

They discussed others as possibilities for any posse that might be required, though both of them realized that the personnel of any posse would be a measure to be determined by the men available at the time.

Quantrell did not keep them waiting long. A buckboard driver brought in word three days later that a bunch of horses had been stolen from a rancher named Ferril, who lived close to the Mal Pais in the western part of the county. Hastily O'Hara gathered a posse and rode to Ferril's place. With him he had Worrall, Owen, and two brothers named Brown.

It was a long ride and the weather was bitter. The snow was five or six inches deep, and the wind swept it from the ground in swirling gusts that drove it into their faces with the sting of sleet. All day they rode, and it was after dark when they reached the ranch which was their destination. Icicles hung from the eyebrows of the men, matted the beards of the two Browns, and depended from the manes of the horses. A dozen times the riders had been forced to dismount in order to get circulation into their legs by walking alongside the animals.

"We'd be nice easy marks if Bob an' his crowd happen to have come back to spend the night," grumbled Amen as they drew up outside the house.

The sheriff slipped from the saddle and knocked on the door.

The rancher called "Who's there?" then after a moment opened without waiting for an answer.

He invited the half-frozen men into the house, and they thawed out in front of the fireplace while Ferril and his son stabled the horses and fed them.

Mrs. Ferril was a bouncing, round-breasted young woman with snapping black eyes. She was twenty years younger than her husband and was the stepmother of the lad. At once she set about making supper for the self-invited guests. While she worked she flashed smiles at them and talked.

The sheriff asked questions enough to direct her conversation. It appeared that Phil, her stepson, had ridden out of an arroyo in time to see the rustlers round up the horses. They had caught sight of him and one of the men had fired at him before he realized that this was a raid. Phil was almost sure that the man who had fired at him was Deever. He had not been near enough to recognize any of the others.

"Which way did they go after leaving the ranch?" Owen asked.

"Toward the Mal Pais," she said. "Hank followed them for several miles. He couldn't miss their trail in the snow. They have a hangout there in a cave. The story is that they have a bunch of cattle rounded up in a valley two-three miles from there."

The men of the posse slept on the floor in their own blankets, which they first dried out before the fire.

In a few minutes they were all dead to the world. It had been an exhausting day and the sturdiest of them was tired. None of them awakened until Phil renewed the fire which had been banked for the night.

"Roll out an' roll up, boys," O'Hara shouted, and he fitted action to word by doing so himself.

They stamped out to the washpan, made themselves clean, and combed their hair. By the time they had fed the horses, breakfast was almost ready.

It had been agreed that Hank Ferril was to ride with them. He did not want to go, but he could not very well object. The stolen horses were his, and he knew the Mal Pais country better than any of the others.

"They're a tough layout, an' I hate to get them sore at me," he said while he was saddling.

"Why, of course, if you're raisin' stock for Bob Quantrell's benefit, Hank," said Owen with obvious sarcasm.

"Not a chance in the world of gettin' my stock back, Amen. Like huntin' a needle in a haystack. If Bob wants us to find him we will; if not, we won't see hide or hair of him. An' you can bet that if we do it'll be because he's got the dead wood on us."

Ferril's prediction was a true one. Forty-eight hours later the posse, a group of weary and saddle-worn men, dismounted at his ranch and bow-legged stiffly to the house from the corral. For a day and a night it had been snowing steadily.

"No luck?" asked Mrs. Ferril of the sheriff.

"No luck," replied O'Hara. "Bob wasn't at home when we reached the cave, but he left a note for us. Thoughtful of him."

He handed a torn fragment of a newspaper to her. On it was scrawled:

"Make yourself comfortable, Sheriff. Flour under the ledge. Quarter of beef hanging from the cottonwood by the spring. Cards on the shelf. Sorry can't stay and say howdy, but I've got a hen on at the Circle S O ranch. Meet up with you and chew over old times later. Adios."

The penciled note was signed "Bob Quantrell."

Mrs. Ferril showed strong white teeth in gay laughter. "He's sure enough a case, that boy. Never saw the beat of him for impudence."

"He's certainly got the laugh on us this time," the sheriff admitted. "Bob must have had a scout out, for he hadn't been gone half an hour when we reached the cave. The fire hadn't died down at all."

"What will you do now?"

"Get back to the Circle S O fast as a horse will carry me. Then I'll probably be too late."

"You may be lucky if you get there too late," she warned.

He agreed that there was something to that.

It was late when O'Hara dropped wearily from the saddle at the Diamond Tail and hailed the house. He wanted to see Jack Phillips, who had since Ingram's death been foreman of the young widow's ranch.

Barbara answered his call. "Who is it?" she asked.

"Garrett. Is Jack here?"

"No, he isn't. He went over to see Dad and said he wouldn't be back till late. What is it, Garrett?"

He hesitated. No use worrying her. "Nothing much, Barbara. I'm on my way to the Circle S O and I stopped to have a word with him. But if he isn't here—"

"Wait just a minute and I'll be out," she said, and drew back from the window.

Presently a lamp was lit. After a minute he saw the light pass from her room to the hall. She opened the front door.

"Come in," she said, holding the lamp high to light the way.

Still he hesitated.

"Come on in, Garrett," she insisted. "I want to see you."

He followed her into the house. She led the way into the sitting room and put the lamp on a table. One swift glance showed her that he was travel-worn.

"I'm not very presentable," he apologized. "I didn't mean to waken you."

"I wasn't asleep. Hadn't gone to bed yet. What is it, Garrett? Something important?"

O'Hara did not want to speak about Quantrell to her. The man had murdered her husband. Even the mention of his name might stab her.

"I just wanted to tell him to keep an eye out for rustlers. I've reason to think some are heading this way."

"You mean the Quantrell gang?" she asked quickly.

"Yes. Probably they'll not show up on your range. More likely the Circle S O country."

"How do you know? Tell me about it." Again her gaze swept up from his muddy boots and leathers to his unshaven face and sunken eyes. She interrupted herself to fling at him a question. "How far have you ridden today?"

"From the Mal Pais."

"When did you eat last?"

"This morning. I was in a hurry to get through. Don't bother about me. I'm all right—get food at the ranch when I get there."

"You'll eat here," she told him firmly. "Lie down on that sofa while I make supper for you."

"No. You're not strong enough. You mustn't—"

"I'm perfectly strong. David is three months old today. How long do you want me to be an invalid?" She tossed some newspapers from the lounge and ordered him to lie down.

Reluctantly, still protesting, he did as he was told. Barbara threw a Navajo rug over him and left the room, taking the lamp with her. Through the door he could see her moving about the kitchen with the light grace that characterized her. His lids drooped. He fought against fatigue. . . . She was a woman to dream about, deep-bosomed and supple-limbed, incomparably alive . . . trusty as steel. . . . Was it any wonder that every fiber of his being had for a year longed for her as Abelard had yearned for Heloise? God must have meant love to fulfil her life. If so. . . .

When she returned, shading the flame of the lamp with her hand, he was sound asleep. Barbara looked down at him, a smile in her eyes. A glow warm and tender pervaded her, a diffused happiness. Never had she known anyone at all like him. Sensitive as a girl, quick with the shyness and the generosity of youth, he was none the less as self-reliant and competent as Dave Ingram himself had been. Gentleness was an essential quality of him, but no more so than the gay courage that emergencies seemed to set bubbling in his veins. He was a bookman—liked to read classics that till lately had been only names to her—but he had flung himself into the frontier life with boyish zest and had met, often buoyantly, always unflinchingly, the stark tests that had been imposed on him.

She let the light shine on him. His eyelids flickered open and he smiled at her.

"Your supper is ready," she told him.

"May I wash my hands?"

She had not forgotten even that. He found warm water in a basin and a clean towel at hand.

While he ate she sat across the table from him, elbow on table and chin on fist, listening to the story of his hunt in the Mal Pais country for the outlaws. He made light of it, but she could muster only a very faint smile even when he read aloud Quantrell's note. The man was more deadly than a rattlesnake, for he struck without warning. She had lived over fifty times that dreadful hour when she had come upon her husband's dead body lying in the road.

From her throat there leaped involuntarily the thought in her mind: "Oh, I wish you weren't sheriff, Garrett!"

A wave of emotion flooded him. He dared not let himself hope that her spontaneous cry meant more than friendship. He passed quickly over it lest she explain it away.

"I'd rather Quantrell felt that way than you," he said, trying for an effect of carelessness.

"There's something—inhuman about him."

He could see that fear had risen to her throat and choked her. Therefore he spoke evenly, almost negligently. "Not at all. He's just a boy gone bad, as they say. And don't forget, Barbara, that he's at the wrong end of this hunt, not I. He's the one that has to double and twist to escape, the one who has to suspect every man he meets of wanting to betray him. We on the side of the law have a tremendous advantage, a moral force that makes a lot of difference."

"What difference would it make if he ever—ever—?"

"Don't worry about me, Barbara. He's not trying to get me but to get away from me." His hand moved a few inches across the table toward her. "I understand how you must feel about him—how you fear for your friends. But it really isn't necessary. I'm taking no unnecessary risks. He may dodge me for a while, but we'll round him up in the end—and I'll not be hurt doing it."

"If you ever get a chance you ought to—to put an end to him as you would a wolf," she cried with a little flare of savagery.

The brown eyes looking into hers were grim. "Listen, Barbara," he said. "I haven't undertaken to fight a duel with Quantrell. He's a killer, an outlaw wanted because of the crimes he has committed. If I can I'll get him at advantage, and if necessary I'll do just what you've said. Our lives aren't of the same value to society. I've been chosen to put an end to his lawless career. That's what I mean to do, one way or another, if I can. I don't intend to be a chivalrous fool about this, if that's what you are afraid of."

She gathered from this what reassurance she could. "But you will be careful, won't you?" she pleaded. "You'll not take any chances you don't have to?"

"Not a chance," he promised. "As the boys say, I'll not throw off on myself."

Garrett O'Hara had talked to Barbara with quiet confidence of the prospects. There was, he felt, no need to alarm her unduly. But the arguments he had used did not wholly convince himself. It is true, in one sense, that the advantage in such a campaign as this lay with the officers. In another way the odds entirely favored the hunted rather than the hunters, because the former could at one time or another choose the setting for battle. During the two days that O'Hara's posse had combed the Mal Pais for the outlaws there had not been an hour when the searchers had not been in terrain where it was possible for Quantrell to ambush them. That he had not done so was either because the young desperado had other fish to fry or because of the criminal's instinct to keep on the dodge as long as he could and avoid an open conflict with the forces of law.

It was all very well to talk about being cautious, but it was an intrinsic part of the game he played that he had to take chances even when he did not know he was taking them.

As O'Hara, on a fresh horse, plowed through the drifts on the divide between the Diamond Tail and the Circle S O, he knew that there never had been a time when he wanted less to fall a victim to Quantrell's marksmanship than now. For his heart was lifted within him. He had seen her concern for him, and he had not dared to trade upon it lest she qualify her words till they meant nothing. Instead of putting her on the defensive he had edged away from the subject in order that she would not take away the hope that had leaped up in him. It was sheer cowardice. He knew that, the while he excused himself on the plea that of all things he must not be precipitate.

Riding through the night, he rebuilt the scene, her words and manner, the inflections of her voice. Had she meant more than friendliness? He would not let himself think so. Yet there blazed in him a new and glorious hope.

CHAPTER XII

The Sheriff Makes a Capture

When O'Hara reached the Circle S O he found that Bob Quantrell had made his threat good. In the darkness he and one other companion had slipped up to the stable and taken two blooded horses that belonged to Smith-Beresford. In place of them they left two leg-weary geldings branded with the sprawling H F used by Hank Ferrel.

Quantrell left also one of his characteristic notes. He had nailed it to the top of the feed bin.

"Only a short visit this time, Mr. Tenderfoot Sheriff. Business in Concho, so I can't stay. Much obliged for the horses. They say an even swap is no robbery. Tell Wes not to feel slighted. I'll drop in on him soon. See you later.

"BOB QUANTRELL."

Tired though he was, O'Hara stayed at the ranch only long enough to have another mount run up and saddled for him. He did not doubt that Quantrell would keep his word and go to Concho. What deviltry he had in mind to do there, if any, the sheriff could not guess. In any case it was his duty to follow the young outlaw to town.

He was disturbed at the loss of the horses. His partner had imported them from Kentucky with a view to raising fine stock or at least improving the native breed. Lyulph would not be pleased, when he returned from England with his bride, to learn that Quantrell had appropriated them, though he would take the loss with characteristic good sportsmanship.

The ride to Concho was a long, cold one and O'Hara was drooping with fatigue. His hands clung to the horn of the saddle. His head nodded. More than once the jolting of the horse's motion awakened him with a start. It was nearly four o'clock when he slipped into town by way of the pasture back of Concho house. Here he dismounted and hobbled the horse, hiding the saddle in a clump of scrub-oak bushes. The pasture was a large one and the odds were that the animal would not be noticed. As it chanced, the brand on it was a P D Bar. Smith-Beresford had bought it from a Buck creek nester and the Circle S O riders had not yet rebranded it. Even if anyone observed the horse he would not associate it with the sheriff. This was important, because O'Hara did not want advertised the fact that he was in town. That was why he had not gone direct to the Longhorn corral.

O'Hara left the pasture, crossed the road, climbed an adobe fence, and passed down a slope to the creek. He followed this for two hundred yards, then moved up through the brush to a little log cabin set well back from the street.

He tapped on the only window and called in a low voice, "Grogan—you there?"

At first there was no answer, but after he had spoken the name again he heard a stir inside, followed by a husky demand, "Who's wantin' me?"

"You alone?"

A momentary pause followed, then a curt reply. "Yep. Now you tell me what I asked."

"Garrett O'Hara. Let me in."

The man in the house could be heard moving about the room. He did not light a lamp, but presently he came to the door and opened it. The sheriff stepped inside and Grogan at once closed and bolted the door.

"Kinda early, or late, one or the other, to be drappin' in on a fellow, ain't it, O'Hara?" the owner of the cabin suggested, yawning.

"Do you know whether Bob Quantrell is in town?" the sheriff asked.

Grogan dropped his arms, still stretched in the yawn. He was a man of medium height, bow-legged and muscular. His hair was a yellowish red, and his face and wrinkled neck were sprinkled with freckles. At the mention of Quantrell's name his lax figure starched to rigidity.

Measurements of Time by Old Water-Clocks

An early means adopted for the measurement of short periods of time was by noting the quantity of water discharged through a small orifice in the containing vessel, says an article in the Montreal Family Herald. If the vessel would empty itself between sunrise and sunset, a certain number of markings equally distant on the side of the vessel would enable one to tell what portion of the day had passed by the height of water. This crude measure of time was called a water-clock.

When the Roman general, Julius Caesar, was carrying out his conquest of Gaul, he crossed to Britain for the first time in the latter part of the summer of 55 B. C. In his account of the expedition he tells of many things he had observed among the Britons, and one was the water-clock. Through accurate measurements by this clock he found that the midsummer nights in Britain were shorter than in the south of Gaul or Italy. He ascertained the fact but he did not know the cause—the spherical form of the earth and its revolving on an axis not at right angles to the plane of its orbit.

Scotsman's Rise

"Sandy," he said, "the accountant is leaving and I'm gaun tae gie you his job."

The young bookkeeper's face lit up with expectation.

"Thank you, sir," he replied. "And what will the salary be now?"

The manager shook his head.

"The same as you're gettin', but ye'll ha'e a hat-peg to yourself now," he returned.—London Answers.

"City of Spires"

There are so many fine spires and towers on the churches and palaces in Copenhagen that it has been described as the "City of Spires." Although it is an ancient city, Copenhagen is now modern in appearance. The earlier houses built of wood were destroyed by fire in the Eighteenth century and have been replaced with brick and stone buildings. Copenhagen is noted for its beautiful parks and gardens, among which the most famous are the Tivoli gardens, laid out in 1843. At night they are lighted with thousands of fairy lights and the theaters, restaurants, concert and dance halls in it offer countless attractions. Indeed, one could easily call it "Denmark's Fairyland."

CALIFORNIA NEWS REVIEW

In order to widen the highway at the approaches to the new Cottonwood bridge, it was necessary to pay $880 for a strip of land 40 feet wide by 200 yards long.

The California State Hotel Association will hold its 1931 convention in Eureka, according to word received by Leo Lebenbaum, lessee of the Eureka Inn. Eureka was selected at the Lake Arrowhead convention.

The Big Sisters of Alameda County, an organization to engage in social service work for benefit of girls between 14 and 21 years of age, filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. Directors included Mrs. F. L. Burckhalter, Mrs. Miles Fox and Miss T. L. Phillips of Oakland.

Possibilty that part of the 151,106 bags of sugar which went through the fire destroying the Holly Sugar Company warehouse at Tracy recently may be salvaged, is admitted by company officials. The value of the sugar before the fire was $697,977. The loss is covered by insurance. The warehouse will be rebuilt at once.

Special legislation, seeking a $400,069 appropriation to erect a new host, assembly and exhibit building on property added to the California State Fair grounds by Sacramento donation was proposed at Sacramento. A bill is being drawn at the instance of the local Chamber of Commerce State Fair committee, headed by Chris R. Jones.

State Senator Herbert W. Slater and Assemblyman Hubert W. Scudder of Sonoma county will ask the coming State legislature for an additional appropriation to complete the jetty now being built at the mouth of Russian river. Already the state and private concerns have spent $70,000 upon the jetty. It is estimated that it will take nearly $50,000 more to complete construction.

Governor-elect Rolph's administration will set aside $2,000,000 in its 1931-33 budget to pay for flood control work on the Sacramento and American rivers, it was announced by Rolland Vandegrift, Rolph's budget maker. The Federal government is expected to appropriate a like amount in line with the program for State-Federal participation in the northern California flood control and reclamation program.

When the Wilbur Gassoway family looked on the burning ruins of their home near McKinleyville recently, the holiday season appeared to hold nothing but the bleakest prospects. Today, however, there was joy in their new home, built for them by friends and neighbors. Lumber was secured from nearby mills and friends furnished the labor. Nearly $100 worth of groceries also was placed in the home.

Probability that dredging operations in Humboldt bay will start early in the new year was predicted when the Humboldt county board of supervisors passed a resolution appropriating $95,000 to be expended immediately by the War Department engineers. The resolution makes the funds available immediately and may be augmented by $187,000, which the government engineers now are endeavoring to secure for this harbor.

Judge Dan E. Kilroy, justice of the peace of Turlock township, is entitled to a salary increase of $50 per month since the township is recognized as belonging to a larger classification. This was the decision by Superior Judge L. W. Fulkerth of Modesto. By Judge Fulkerth's decision, Kilroy is awarded $1150 in back salary, which represents the $50 per month he has alleged was due.

Recommending discontinuance of annual teachers' institutes, with an annual saving of $30,000 to taxpayers of the county; dismantling of the Bryant school; slight salary increases for the Undersheriff to $2700 a year, two deputies at $2400 a year, two at $2250 and six at $2100; another deputy for the County Clerk's office, and commending the manner in which the county hospital and tuberculosis sanatorium are administered, the Kern county grand jury, under the foremanship of John P. Brooke, has submitted a partial report of its investigation to Superior Judge C. E. Arnold. The jury opposes the proposed $2,500,000 county bond issue.

MOTORISTS WARNED

Although the government has taken wood alcohol out of the denatured alcohol formulas, deadly methanol synthetic wood alcohol is still being offered as an anti-freeze compound and commercial solvent in a dangerously promiscous manner, a press report declares.

Public health authorities of New Jersey, Connecticut, Wisconsin, New New York City, Chicago, Seattle, and Waterbury, Conn., are investigating the sale of methanol wood alcohol, with a view to regulating or prohibiting altogether its distribution to the general public. Other medical and labor organizations are studying the problem.

Not only will one drink of wood alcohol kill or blind a man, but merely inhaling the fumes of this deadly poison has produced the same result. Cases are reported in which absorption through the skin impaired the vision of persons using the product in industry.

After a recent methanol drinking party in Pittsfield, Mass., had killed eight and blinded one, Chief of Police Sullivan wired Attorney General Warren as follows: "Prohibit the sale of anti-freeze methanol, 76 per cent wood alcohol, sold in hardware stores and filling stations as a substitute for denatured alcohol. The dealers do not realize the difference. Eight deaths in Pittsfield. This is only a forerunner of more tragedies in Massachusetts."

Motorists, filling station attendants and others should exercise extreme care in avoiding exposure to breathing the fumes of wood alcohol or absorbing this lethal liquid through the skin. To avoid these dangers, only safe anti-freeze compounds should be demanded.

DEATH'S HEAVY HAND

In a recent compilation, no less than 134 notables of national or international reputation are listed among those who died during 1930. A few of the most distinguished included in the list are the following:

Edward Bok, editor and philanthropist; Cardinal Merry del Val; Grand Admiral von Tirpitz of Germany; William H. Taft, former president and chief justice; Primo de Rivera, former Spanish dictator; Lord Balfour, British statesman; Dr. Fridajof Nansen, noted Norwegian explorer; Dr. Elmer A. Sperry, inventor of the gyroscope and many other notable appliances; Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, pure food advocate; Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, British author; Glenn H. Curtiss, aviation pioneer; Charles M. Stedman, oldest Congressman; Daniel Guggenheim, capitalist and philanthropist; General Weyler, Spain's ranking and most ruthless soldier; Dr. Julia Holmes Smith, pioneer suffragist; Captain Otto Sverdrup, Norwegian Arctic explorer; and Mother Jones, celebrated labor leader.

The stage lost Mabel Norman, Lon Chaney and Milton Sills, besides several lesser stars. Among the noted educators who died were Dr. Harry B. Hutchins, Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, Dr. Arthur T. Hadley, presidents emeritus of Michigan, Brown and Yale Universities, respectively. Former United States Senators Dubois of Idaho, Johnson of Maine, Phelan of California, du Pont of Delaware and Clark of Wyoming are also included in the list.

All of which may well remind us of Gray's immortal line, "the paths of glory lead but to the grave."

A POSSIBLE TAX REDUCTION

In a review of the 1930 activities at the close of the year, County Auditor Edward M. Stack and County Tax Collector Ambrose McSweeney indicated that a substantial reduction in taxes was a probability for 1931. This should be welcome news.

These county officials base their prediction on the grounds that 1931 will not have to stand the costs of a general election nor will the costs of building an addition to the Community hospital appear on the tax bill.

Another sweeping change in store for 1931 is a contemplated reassessment, something that this county has needed for some time. And with this announcement comes some more good news. Assessor Daniel Flynn announces that he has money available for this purpose and that it will be accomplished at a saving to the taxpayers. He estimates that he can make this reassessment at a saving of $35,000 by doing it under his personal supervision rather than awarding a contract to outside parties at an estimated cost of $80,000.

With lower taxes promised and several county officials making public declarations that they were going to accomplish necessary work at a saving, the county business outlook takes on a bright aspect.

WATCHING OUR DOLLARS WORK

Editorials have been written on "Trading at Home" until the subject is a little bit shopworn.

Dollars invested in Daly City go to buildings in Daly City. They work in Daly City. Dollars spent otherwhere work otherwhere. And except for the temporary glamor of dealing with strangers, what advantage do we get out of trading elsewhere than at home?

The question in the end simmers down into the fact that the amount of money that the average business man makes on the merchandise that goes through his hands would BEST be invested by him and by you, through spending it with him in your home town where you can see it work.

Too often when we think we are getting "better bargains" in some other town, we find that when we have considered the cost of transportation to and from, compared the prices and quality, considered the loss in time it takes, about all we have gained is a business trip, rather than a pleasure trip.

Daly City business men do not say "Trade at Home." They say, "TRY FIRST AT HOME." Not one of them would say that a customer should pay more or secure a poorer quality from a local business man, but all of them are striving to give the best quality and the best price, because they realize that therein lies not only a greater measure of service to you, but their own future prosperity.

And in the end, it resolves itself into a matter of co-operation, of "All for one and one for all." Just as the members of a family work together for their own best interests, so should the members of this community family of Daly City work together for all our best interests, and this is only one way in which we can do this to good advantage.

FOOD FALICIES

Popular ideas about food are a strange admixture of truth and fiction, according to a recent article by Dr. Lieb, an authority on diet. And particularly is this the case with respect to notions of what is good for people, or not good for them, under varying circumstances.

For example, bananas and nuts were long thought to be hard to digest, but if the bananas are ripe and the nuts are chewed sufficiently, they are among the most easily digestible of foods.

The prejudice against raw foods is also unwarranted, it is said. Raw corn, wheat and other starches in moderate amounts are completely digested, while raw potatoes are 78 per cent digestible. The craving of some children for raw potatoes may be indulged to a reasonable extent without harm, and the same is true of raw cabbage and lettuce.

Drinking water during meals was long thought to be harmful to the digestion, but for normal persons it is now declared to be beneficial if sipped in between swallows of solid food.

Forcing children to eat spinach or other foods which they do not like is not good for them, as the feeling of repulsion which they experience hinders digestion.

While the doctor does not say so in as many words, it appears that a rather safe rule of diet is to eat what one likes, provided it does not produce any disagreeable after effects. And regardless of advice, that is what most of us insist on doing anyway.

BIG NEWS OF 1930

Recently Kent Cooper, head of the Associated Press, selected what he considered the ten biggest news stories of 1930. We pass them along so that our readers may see how his judgment compares with theirs.

These are not intended to represent necessarily the most important happenings of the year, although most of them of first importance, but the stories which were most dramatic, exciting, or otherwise filled with human interest. Here are Mr. Cooper's selections:

Finding of the bodies of Andree and his balloon companions in the Arctic after thirty-three years.

Coste and Bellonte's westward flight across the Atlantic, Paris to New York City.

Crash of the Britich dirigible R-101, with the loss of forty-eight lives.

Incendiary fire in the Ohio penitentiary at Columbus, causing the death of 318 convicts.

The unprecedented drought in the United States.

Treaties resulting from the London naval conference.

Adoption of the Young plan for settlement of war reparations.

Gandhi revolt in India.

Birth of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr.

BRIDGING THE CHANNEL

Long considered plans for building a tunnel under the English Channel to connect France and England have again been dropped, but it is now proposed to establish a train ferry between Calais and Dover instead.

The English Southern Railway and the French Chemin de Fer du Nord are working on this project, by which trains will be run without change between London and Paris. Freight trains will be first tried, and if found practicable, passenger trains will follow.

The cost of improvements in the harbors of Dover and Calais and the establishment of the train ferry system is estimated at $25,000,000, or only about one-tenth of what a tunnel would cost.

Though occupying only one-thirteenth of the earth's surface, Europe has more than one-fourth of its population—480 millions out of 1,906 millions in 1927, according to the Secretariat of the League of Nations. This population is served efficiently by 32 per cent of all the world's railways, which also connect strategically with lines reaching to the most remote parts of the eastern hemisphere.

While the proposed new train ferry across the Channel is only a tiny link in this vast system, it will be an important one for facilitating transportation between France and England.

Many years of successful operation of similar ferries between Key West and Havana, four times the distance between Calais and Dover, leaves no doubt of the practicability of the Franco-British project.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

A. G. (Pat) Mayse, pblisher of the Paris, Texas, Morning News, says:

That although it is often said in such a manner as to imply originality, there is perhaps no town in which some one has not said, "What this town needs is a few first class funerals." I have never and do not now agree with the expression. The foundation of the civilization we now enjoy and the progress of our cities and towns have been brought about through sacrificial contributions of time and money of our pioneers. We applaud a man while he is in active service, but it is strange to observe how quickly we forget men who have worked in the past.

The present generation gives no credit to the men who cleared the timber, beat out the paths, built the fences, cultivated the soil and erected our first schools and churches. Those men recognized the responsibility of citizenship and met their duties in a noble way.

I heard it said not long since of an elderly man that he was "an old tightwad who never did anything for the town." Yet I happen to know that no single citizen of that particular town has contributed as much in money and in time as that good man has given. It is true that with the passing of the years some men cannot keep time with the rapid steps of progress, yet their hearts are right and most of them, even now, are doing more than they get credit for.

No, most of our towns do not need a "few first class funerals." Rather they need a re-birth of the hardihood, loyalty, courage, foresight and stability of men who have gone on before. We need fewer men, yet comparatively young, to stop saying that they have "served their time," and who are always willing to "let George do it."

The next time you hear somebody say, "What this town needs is a few first class funerals," call their hand and check up the records.

Before his death an Indiana man had a telephone installed in his mausoleum, and he hasn't once complained of getting the wrong number.

An Oklahoma dairyman confidingly advertises: "Having installed city water, I can easily increase my customers for milk."

EARNEST YOUNG PEOPLE

To our mind, too much is written about the frivolities of our young people, and not enough concerning their earnest and successful efforts in behalf of social betterment. This thought is inspired by a recent article in The Southerner, a magazine of society and culture, published in Atlanta, Georgia.

It deals with the activities of Miss Carrie McClure Knox, of Anniston, Alabama, a young woman who has done and is doing a splendid work for her little home city of a few thousand people in connection with the establishment and maintenance of a Little Theatre organization.

After her graduation from college, Miss Knox devoted herself to the promotion of amateur theatricals among school children, and later among the grown-ups, with the result that a permanent Little Theatre, with its own playhouse, has just entered upon its fourth successful season. Even more remarkable is the fact that this organization, with Miss Knox as a leading member of the cast, has won national prizes in amateur theatrical competitions in New York, although Anniston is one of the smallest cities in the country to maintain such a company of players.

Miss Knox's accomplishment, while extraordinary, is not entirely unique. Throughout the land, both North and South, East and West, hundreds of capable and earnest young people are performing similar services of high value for their communities.

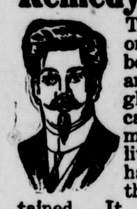
As stated in the beginning, their good work should receive attention at the hands of those whose writings are supposed to reflect the ideals and the activities of the younger generation.

A fluent flow of language enables us to expose our ignorance more convincingly.

HIGHEST EASTERN MOUNTAIN

The highest mountain of the Appalachian system is Mount Mitchell, N. C., 6,711 feet above sea level, according to the Geological Survey of the Department of the Interior. Clingman's Dome, Tennessee, with an altitude of 6,644 feet, is a close second. The average height of land in North Carolina is only 700 feet; that of Tennessee is 900 feet. Every state west of the Mississippi river, except Missouri, Arkansas and Louisiana, has a greater average altitude than these, and Colorado's average is higher than the highest point of the Appalachian Mountains.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made



To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

ABOUT WOMEN

Miss Ruby M. Ayres, author of "Broken," is acclaimed by critics as England's formeost woman novelist.

Mrs. Effie Gene Wingo, of Little Rock, widow of the late Congressman Otis T. Wingo, was elected to succeed her husband in both the unexpired term and the full two-year term to which he had been nominated.

Miss Claire E. Owens, a blind woman, of Exeter, Neb., has been elected to the state house of representatives.

The first woman of New York commissioned to act on vote frauds is Miss Emily Marx, special deputy attorney general.

Julict Marston, of Montclair, N. J., recently completed her first solo flight, after only five and a half hours of dual instruction, which is believed to be the shortest period of instruction for any woman flier.

Miss Carrie Chapman Catt, a leader in the woman's suffrage movement for more than 40 years, was recently awarded the Pictorial Review award for the American woman who has contributed most to the national life.

After three months of flying instruction i· New York, Mrs. H. Foster Bain, 51, has received her private pilot's license.

Miss Peggy Hamilton, who has been appointed county hostess of Los Angeels, will welcome visiting celebrities during the 1932 Olympic games.

Mrs. M. L. Friese, of Redwood Falls, Minn., won the Thanksgiving dinner menu contest conducted by the Farm Bureau Federation.

The first successful Republican candidate for public office in Dallas, Texas, is Miss Helen Achenhauser.

Lieutenant Sophie Nowosielski, who recently arrived in San Francisco as a good-will representative of her country, has received more decorations than any woman in Poland for actual fighting.

Miss Alda Mandel, earning her way through the Univresity of Washington at Seattle by stoking a furnace and working in a tea room, won a $100 scholarship for standing at the head of her class.

SIDELIGHTS

A Maine lady, Mrs. O. W. Creamer, did not make better mouse traps to cause the world to beat a path to her door, but she discovered them. Leaving some live clams in her cellar over night, she found the next morning that three of them had each caught a mouse. Neighbors are discarding other mouse traps and putting clams on the job.

Judge B. M. Miller, governor-elect of Alabama, is besieged with office-seekers just now, and never turns one away empty-handed. To each caller he presents a nice, juicy apple. Which is better than "handing him a lemon."

Impatience spoiled Christmas for two San Francisco brothers, Norman and Earle Elickson, aged 11 and 12, repsectively. They couldn't resist the urge to try gift roller skates a few days ahead of time, and each suffered a fractured wrist at his first attempt to skate.

Mrs. W. O. Moore, of Indianapolis, begins the new year with a clear conscience, after suffering remorse because she had failed to pay for a railroad trip taken nine years ago. She recently turned over the amount due the company, $1.29, saying: "It's been on my conscience all this time."

A stern and fearless limb of the law is praised by a Missouri newspaper thusly: "Our new constable, Homer Cake, is right on the job, and it is hoped that he will continue to be there. This week he spoke to nine children under the age of 13 about driving automobiles, which is against the law."

Alaskan natives are rapidly becoming civilized, even to the extent of awarding alimony. For deserting his squaw, Charlie Big Eyes of Ninilchik was required to pay her one butchered bull moose, ten dressed mink skins, ten fox pelts, and 100 salmon.

Another sad story from Russia: Audrey Jukov, aged 157, while skating after freely imbibing vodka, ventured upon thin ice and broke through. That night he died of crup.

Opportunities for export trade are listed in bulletins by the Department of Commerce, one of which recently revealed inquiries for garlic, windmills, popcorn machinery, garters, milk bottles, padlocks, whale and shark meat. Or what have you?

An American veterinarian, called to treat a sick cow belonging to a native dairyman of Honolulu, failed to inspire the confidence of the owner. Ignoring the veterinarian's prescription, the dairyman cut off part of the the cow's tail and took it to a Hawaiian priest, who invoked the pagan gods in the animal's behalf. The cow got well.

BOYS AND GIRLS

In the annual 4-H Club Congress, Marian E. Syndergaard, 15-year-old girl of Grundy County, Iowa, and William R. Rodenhamer, 20, of Johnson county, Missouri, were named as the healthiest girl and boy in the United States.

While visiting at the White House recently, Harry Lucke, 9, of Orange, N. J., was presented a Lindbergh medal souvenir by President Hoover himself.

Emma Sobo, 17, of Woodside, N. Y., was crowned "Miss Maygar America" at the Hungarian ball given in New York City.

Two girls, June E. Pope and S. Helen Schultz, of Memphis, Tenn., are the South's only representatives this year at the College of Engineering, University of Illinois.

Ralph Emerson Hipple, of Harrisburg, Pa., was heard whistling dulcet tones through puckered lips at the age of 10 months.

Although he never has had music lessons, Errol Grandy, 11-year-old negro of Salem, Va., renders masterpieces on the piano. He gave a piano recital at the age of 5.

Harold Mizelle, 4, made a bus trip alone from his home at Houston, Tex., to Bartlow, Florida.

The world's first parachute jump by a girl from a glider was successfully accomplished by Teddy Hall at the Grand Central air terminal at Glendale, Cal.

Bessie Jean Hunt, a freshman at the University of California, is said to be the national girl archery champion.

Baby Jacqueline De River, of Los Angeles, was recently photographed with her mother, grandmother, great grandmother and great-great-grandmother.

The first girl to enter Turkey's navy is Feruh Henoum, who has been admitted as a cadet from the Gedikii Naval School, Constantinople.

George Farrell, a page boy in the National Broadcasting building in New York, was recently awarded the Graham McNamee scholarship for vocal study.

DIPHTHERIA BEING WIPED OUT

Diphtheria is on the point of being wiped out as a cause of death in the United States, according to Dr. W. P. Shepard, chairman of the Health Council of the Community Chest, San Francisco.

Deaths from diphtheria in San Francisco in 1922 totaled 148, or 24.6 per 100,000, while in 1929 only 17 persons died in San Francisco of diphtheria, making the rate 2.5 per 100,000 population.

This rapid decrease in the death rate is due to public health education and inoculation with toxin antitoxin, Dr. Shepard points out.

Last year the board of health administered toxin antitoxin to 2,991 parochial and public school children in San Francisco. These figures do not include those who received the inoculation at clinics, health centers and community houses.

FINALLY GOT HIM

After several years of unsuccessful effort to get a local hardware merchant to advertise, the publisher of a Kansas weekly newspaper was surprised to receive an order for a full page from the former non-advertiser.

Glancing at the copy, the publisher discovered that it announced a "closing out sale." The hardware man was going out of business. His advertising competitors had taken his trade and there was nothing left for him to do. So the newspaper man had landed his prospect at last.

The merchant recognized the power of advertising to help him to get out of business, but had failed to recognize its power to help him stay in business. There are a lot of merchants like that.

HIGHEST POINT IN UNION IS IN OUR OWN CALIFORNIA

Colorado is the highest state in the Union, its average altitude above sea level being 6,800 feet, according to the Geological Survey of the Interior Department. Wyoming is a close second, with an average altitude of 6,700 feet.

The highest point in the United States is Mount Whitney, California, 14,496 feet, which is 76 feet higher than Mount Elbert, Colorado, the second highest mountain.

The highest pass in the United States is Whitney Pass, California, 13,333 feet above sea level.

Wells and Marian R. Wells, his wife, conveyed to California Pacific Title & Trust Company, as trustee, to secure the payment to Niels Schultz and Gus Moeller and Sons, a corporation, of the indebtedness and obligations more particularly described in said deed of trust, all of that certain real property, with the improvements thereon and appurtenances thereof, situate in the County of San Mateo, State of California, and more particularly described as follows:

Lot 10 in Block 20, as designated on the map entitled "Map of Subdivision No. 1 Millbrae Highlands, Millbrae, San Mateo County, California", which map was filed in the office of the Recorder of the County of San Mateo, State of California, on April 7, 1927, in Liber 15 of Maps at pages 48 to 52, inclusive; and

WHEREAS, thereafter and on June 3, 1930, said Niels Schultz and Gus Moeller and Sons, by unrecorded instrument of transfer, assigned said note as collateral security to American Trust Company; and

WHEREAS, thereafter by instrument of assignment dated September 23, 1930, and recorded in said Recorder's office on September 24, 1930, in Volume 495 of Official Records at page 252, said Niels Schultz and Gus Moeller and Sons, a corporation, assigned said note and deed of trust, and their and each of their rights in, to or under the same, to Harold M. Child; and

WHEREAS, thereafter and upon and after default by said grantors in the payment of the promissory note described in and secured by said deed of trust, and more than three months prior to posting and commencement of publication of this notice of sale, notice by said American Trust Company and said Harold M. Child, and each of them, pursuant to Section 2924 of the Civil Code of the State of California, of breach of the obligations secured by said deed of trust, and of their and each of their election to cause the real property covered by said deed of trust to be sold to satisfy the obligations thereby secured, was recorded in said Recorder's Office;

NOW, THEREFORE, said California Pacific Title & Trust Company, as trustee as aforesaid, hereby gives notice that under and pursuant to said deed of trust, and pursuant to said recorded notice of breach and election to sell, and to accomplish the purposes and make the payments specified in said deed of trust, said California Pacific Title & Trust Company, as such trustee, will sell said real property above described at public auction, to the highest cash bidder, on the 2nd day of February, 1931, at twelve o'clock noon of said day, at the main entrance to the City Hall, in the City of San Mateo, County of San Mateo, State of California. Said Niels Schultz, Gus Moeller and Sons, a corporation, American Trust Company and Harold M. Child, or any of them, or the holder or holders of said promissory note, their agent or assigns, and/or any other bidder not prohibited by law, may bid and purchase at said sale, and after making such sale, and upon receipt of the purcase price, said California Pacific Title & Trust Company, as such trustee, will make, execute and deliver to the purchaser or purchasers at said sale, his or their heirs or assigns, a deed of the premises so sold.

Title is not guaranteed, and the same shall be subject to all liens, rights and interests, if any, superior to said deed of trust.

Not Guilty!

The verdict was "Guilty!" The evidence of guilt was indisputable; a hardened criminal; eye-witnesses; an offense against society. Sentence—life imprisonment.

One more human being segregated from society, to lead a penitentiary life for a crime which could not be undone.

Few in the court room that day realized the most important factors of the case; that this criminal act had not been an unpremeditated offense; it did not occur without a series of lesser crimes preceding it, leading up to its immensity. The prisoner had not stepped from an honest, industrious, law-abiding citizen, with one sudden act, into the role of criminal outcast.

His evolution followed in the footsteps of practically every criminal. The beginning of his crime dated back to early influences; school and boyhood companions; the community influence on his youthful mind; the opportunity to become congenially and successfully engaged in a useful, profitable occupation.

That is the story of crime. It has its roots in small beginnings. CRIME DOES NOT FIND A FERTILE SPOT FOR ITS VICIOUS ROOTS IN A GOD-FEARING, LAW-ABIDING COMMUNITY! A community where LAW AND LAW ENFORCEMENT are honored and respected!

It takes more than an efficient law enforcement unit. It takes the support of every individual citizen to make a one hundred per cent law-abiding community.

Are WE neglecting OUR SHARE in the minor law observances? Let's see that the verdict is NOT GUILTY!

An honest, law-abiding reputation is an important community asset and is worth much to us in

PAUL REVERE'S MIDNIGHT RIDE

"Listen, my children, and you shall hear
Of the midnight ride of Paul Revere."

In these famous words the beloved poet, Longfellow, began his own account of an important and colorful incident in American history. This excellent story-poem is universally known among the school children of the country, but it seems that the venerable bard allowed his sense of the dramatic to obscure the facts in the case, with the result that a somewhat fictitious story has been perpetrated in an interesting but inaccurate epic. For, instead of reaching Concord, as Longfellow relates, Paul Revere was captured by the English just outside of Lexington.

The division of information and publication of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission, apparently as particular with regard to the truth as was the great Father of His Country, has issued a statement in recognition of the one hundred and ninety-sixth birthday anniversary, on January 1st, of the "patriot Mercury" which tells the story of Paul Revere's immortal "midnight ride."

The year 1775 opened upon a very critical situation in the American Colonies, and even the most hopeful were becoming convinced that an armed conflict with the mother country was inevitable. British troops were stationed in Boston, which was considered the hot-bed of rebellion, but the presence of these soldiers only made worse an already hopeless condition. The citizens of Boston vigorously protested Englands' action in stationing an army there, and committees were formed to keep a vigilant eye on the Redcoats and all their movements. One purpose of these committees was to prevent the capture of John Hancock and Samuel Adams, whom the English regarded as seditionists and who were at that time really the leaders of the Massachusetts resistance to the authority of parliament.

Paul Revere, a Boston silversmith, whose father was a Huguenot refugee to the colonies, was a member of one of these committees which reported directly to Adams and Hancock. In the early part of April, 1775, the movements of the British troops had aroused the suspicions of the patriot vigilantes, who became convinced that the capture of their leaders was intended. Revere had visited Lexington a few days before his memorable ride took place and on his way back to Boston had stopped in Charlestown to arrange with a friend the means to be employed in apprising the latter of the movements of the soldiers. Adams and Hancock were in Lexington, and if their capture were intended the men had to be informed beforehand.

On the night of April 18, Dr. Joseph Warren learned that eight hundred troops under Lieutenant Colonel Francis Smith were leaving with the double objective of capturing Hancock and Adams and destroying the military stores at Concord which the patriots had been collecting. The future hero of Bunker Hill immediately dispatched William Dawes for Lexington, from which place he was to proceed to Concord. Warren then sent for Revere, whom he instructed to ride to these villages by another route. The patriot silversmith sought out a friend and requested him to place two lanterns in the tower of North Church as a signal to the watchers in Charlestown, then proceeded to the Charleston river, where a boat awaited him. In this craft, with muffled oar-locks, he was rowed to the opposite shore, passing under the guns of the British man-of-war, Somerset, and avoiding by about five minutes the soldiers who had been sent to detain him.

In Charleston, Rever found that his signals had been seen, and procuring a horse, he immediately set off for Lexington. He had just passed Charleston Neck when he saw two mounted British officers waiting under a tree. As these men rode toward him, Revere took flight and succeeded in eluding his would-be captors after one of them had been caught in a clay pond. In a letter written to a friend sometime later, Revere, describing his ride, said that from here on he "alarmed almost every house" until he reached Lexington.

When he arrived at this place the courier patriot rode directly to the house of Rev. Jonas Clark, where Hancok and Adams were staying. He apprised these men of their danger, and, after partaking of refreshments, he started for Concord with Mr. Dawes, who arrived in the meantime, to warn the militia there of the plans of the British to capture the stores collected in that city. They were joined by Dr. Prescott, a young patriot of that vicinity, but after proceeding only a short distance the three Americans were accosted by a body of English soldiers. Prescott escaped by jumping his horse over a stone wall, but his two companions were captured, and in this abrupt manner the "midnight ride of Paul Revere" was rudely terminated. Prescott alone of the three riders was able to reach Concord.

Revere was not long detained by his captors, who returned with him to Lexington, where he was relieved of his horse. He then assisted Adams and Hancock to a more secluded retreat, after which he probably returned to his home in Bostor.

Despite the difference between the facts in the case and the picture drawn in Longfellow's immortal poem, Paul Revere reamins none the less a patriot hero. Throughout the entire Revolution he was prominent in his service to his country. At first he acted as a messenger and made several trips from Boston to New York and Philadelphia, to carry word to Congress of the situation in Massachusetts. He was one of the leaders in the Boston Tea Party. But his most famous exploit was, of course, his ride to Lexington.

A fact perhaps too little known is that Revere was "the most remarkable man to develop American industries that the first two hundred years of American history produced." He was an expert gold-and-silversmith; he rolled copper for use on the "Constitution; he was an engraver, a dentist and an iron molder. He manufactured bells which were among the finest in the country, and over seventy-five of these bells are still in use in New England. The copper rolling industry he established in Canton, Massachusetts, in 1801, is still in existence and is conducted today by direct descendants of its founder.

When Paul Revere died on May 10, 1818, he was 83 years old and enjoyed the respect and esteem of all his countrymen. He had served his country well and honorably—his life had been long and useful. Today America honors his memory in gratitude for his loyalty to the cause of independence.

CALIFORNIA TAKES THE LEAD IN NATURAL GAS CONSUMERS

California has more natural gas consumers than any other state, having taken the lead from Ohio during the past year, according to a report issued by the Federal Department of Commerce. Most of the gain in this state was due to construction by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company of a far-flung netwoork of transmission mains to serve natural gas throughout Northern and Central California.

CALIFORNIA FIRST IN POPULATION GROWTH

Final population figures for California have just been issued by the Census Bureau in bulletin form. The population of the state on April 1, 1930, according to the Fifteenth Census, was 5,677,251, which represents an increase of 2,250,390, or 65.7 per cent, as compared with the popluation on January 1, 1920. This was the highest rate of increase recorded by any state in the ten years since 1920, and the numerical increase was the greatest ever shown by any state in any census period. As a result of this unusual gain, California now ranks sixth among the states in population, having passed Michigan and Massachusetts during the decade.

In 1848, California was ceded to the United States by Mexico, and in 1850 it was admitted into the Union as the thirty-first state. The census of 1850, the returns for which are incomplete, showed a population of 92,597. Doring the next ten years, the state gained 310.4 per cent. The population grew rapidly in the succeeding decades, and in 1890 the first million mark was passed. In 1920, a population of over three million was recorded. The total land area of the state of California is 155,652 square miles, and the average number of inhabitants per square mile in 1930 was 36.5, as compared with 22.0 in 1920.

There are forty-seven cities in California which had a population of 10,000 or more in 1930. The rapid growth of these cities accounts for the major part of the state's increase. Los Angeles, the largest city in the state and fifth largest in the United States, has a population of 1,238,048, which represents an increase of 661,375, or 114.7 per cent, over its population in 1920. San Francisco, which is the second largest city in the state and the eleventh in the United States, has 634,394 inhabitants. Its increase was 127,718, or 25.2 per cent, over its population in 1920. Oakland, the third city, has a population of 284,063, representing an increase of 67,802, or 31.4 per cent.

The remaining cities having more than 100,000 inhabitants are San Diego, with 147,995, and Long Beach, with 142,032. Both of these cities first passed the 100,000 mark between 1920 and 1930.

There are six cities in the papulation group 50,000 to 100,000. These cities, in the order of population, are Sacramento, Berkeley, Pasadena, Glendale, San Jose, and Fresno.

Beverly Hills, with a population of 17,429, had a 2,485.9 per cent increase since 1920, which was the highest in the state. Of the cities exceeding 10,000 inhabitants, eighteen more than doubled in population between 1920 and 1930, and twenty-two first attained a population of 10,000 during the past decade. One of these cities, South Gate, in Lose Angeles county, with 19,632 inhabitants, was not incorporated until 1923.

There are fifty-eight counties in California, of which fifty-two increased population between 1920 and 1930, and six showed decreases.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

H. B. Farquhar, editor of the Bethlehem (Pa.) Globe-Times, says:

That Behlchem has adopted what is said to be the only method of its kind to cope with the present depression in the matter of relieving temporary unemployment until the wheels of industry begin again to revolve more steadily.

The Chamber of Commerce has been pleased to think of the depression in terms of business—not charity. That is, instead of becoming engaged in raising sums of money to take care of the needy, efforts were put forth to get the people to arrange to do all kinds of improvements to their property now, and they have responded nobly, thus giving employment to many people out of work.

The housewife has been importuned and she is having furniture upholstered, housecleaning advanced several weeks, stacks of clothing that need it repaired, etc.

As a result of all this, temporary work has been given to scores. Also as a result the Family Welfare Association, which has the care of the needy, reports that the calls on it for assistance at this writing are only slightly above normal, and that if the "promotion of employment" movement is kept up during the winter, the chances are that the people of Bethlehem will not be called upon to dig down deeply into their pockets for money to be devoted to charity.

"If You Care, Do Your Share" is the slogan of the drive.

POWER FOR CANNERIES

Monterey canneries are assured of all the power they want, no matter how big their "packs." The company has authorized a new power circuit to serve them, involving an expenditure of about $10,000.

STATE ROAD SYSTEM TOTALS 6,581 MILES

California's state highway system now includes a total of 6,581 miles, representing an expenditure of nearly a quarter of a billion dollars, according to a summarized report by C. H. Purcell, State Highway Engineer, received by the California State Automobile Association.

Improvement has been completed on 4,796 miles, and 652 miles of road are under construction or reconstruction at the present time, the report stated. The total amount spent upon the highway system, up to June 30, 1930, including maintenance and administration, was $221,138,412.82.

The mileage of state highways improved or under construction consists of 493 miles of graded roads; 431 miles surfaced with untreated crushed gravel or stone; 1,245 miles of oil-treated crushed gravel or stone; 385 miles of bituminous macadam; 1,654 miles of Portland cement concrete pavement; and 588 miles of asphalt concrete surface.

LICENSE RENEWAL TIME FOR HUNTING AND FISHING

With the advent of the new year, sportsmen are cautioned that they must obtain the new 1931 hunting and fishing licenses before they may indulge in their favorite recreation. The old licenses became void December 31. The Division of Fish and Game has issued a statement advising hunters and anglers to obtain their new credentials withoout delay.

For the benefit of motorists, the California State Automobile Assoociation is issuing licenses at its offices throughout Northern and Central California. Fees remain the same, $2 for either hunting or fishing licenses. The new series differ in appearance and are easily distinguished from the old licenses.

A slight misunderstanding gave Mrs. John Acker, of Newark, an awful shock. Tried with her husband for passing bad checks, the judge sentenced John to a year in jail, and then said to her, "I'll give you a like sentence." Mrs. Acker thought the judge said "life," and fainted.

One disadvantage of not having a college education is being obliged to support a son who has one.

Naturally
it takes more fuel to heat your home in JANUARY
— this is the coldest month

Naturally, it takes more fuel to heat your home in January. For that is the coldest month of the year.

So it doesn't matter what fuel you may be using or whether you pay for it monthly or at the beginning of the heating season, facts prove that during January you must have more heat.

With gas heating, you pay for the fuel each month after using it. Therefore, the logical way to look at the cost of gas heating is the average monthly cost or the total yearly cost.

Because we have no way of separating the gas you use for heating from that used for cooking and water heating, all gas consumed is shown on the same monthly bill. However, every one knows from experience during months when no gas is used for heating about what the bill for cooking and water heating will run. We suggest that you deduct the cost of gas for cooking and water heating when estimating the average net monthly or yearly cost of gas for house heating.

If the cost of gas is figured in this manner, it will be found that warmth and comfort with gas heating equipment is most economical. Furthermore, gas is the cleanest and safest fuel you can use.

THERE is no news at the Motor Shows of comparable importance to this announcement by Studebaker—Free Wheeling with positive gear control is now yours in Studebaker's brilliant new Six.

The two finest cars in America have now adopted Free Wheeling as first introduced in Studebaker Eights on July 10, 1930.

Experience the marvel of Free Wheeling for yourself in this big 114-inch wheelbase Studebaker Six. It harnesses momentum and puts it to work—allows the engine to "rest" two miles out of every ten—insures an actual saving of 12% to 20% in gasoline and oil.

You drive as in a conventional car. Yet you need not use the clutch at all in making your most important shifts—from second to high or from high back to second. You make these shifts easily, silently, at any speed. The full braking power of the engine is instantly available.

Take nobody's word for Free Wheeling. See this new Studebaker Six—drive it. It is backed by Studebaker's 79 years of manufacturing success and integrity.

The colored minister was describing the "bad place" to a congregation of awed listeners.

"Friends," he said, "You've seen molten iron running out of a furnace, haven't you? It is white hot, sizzling and hissing. Well—"

The minister pointed a long, lean finger at the fringhtened crowd.

"Well," he declared, "they use that stuff for ice cream in the place I am talking about."
